Main Brewery Page - Story

The screenshot shows a brewery profile page on the Beerpopper platform. At the top, there's a banner featuring a large image of a beer bottle and glass, with the Indian Joe's Brewing logo overlaid. The logo features a Native American chief with a feathered headdress and the text "Indian Joe Brewing" and "CHIEF OF THEM ALL". Below the banner, the brewery's name "Indian Joe's Brewing" is displayed in a large, bold font, followed by "Vista, CA". On the left side, there's a sidebar with links for "About", "Hours", "Story", "Address", "Beers", and "UnFollow". A large number "4" indicates "Unique Visits" and "150 Total Visits". In the center, there's a "About" section containing a detailed story about the brewery's return after rumors of closure. To the right, there are sections for "Following" (AleSmith Brewing Company), "Beers On Tap" (listing American Indian Red Ale, American Indian Pale Ale, Apricot Peach Hefeweizen, and Milk Stout), and "User Followers". The overall layout is clean and modern, designed for mobile and desktop users.

The rumors of Indian Joe's demise have been greatly exaggerated. Such is the case in a realm as prone to rumors as San Diego's craft beer industry. Despite asserting Indian Joe Brewing Company would be back even before they closed the doors to their Vista brewery and tasting room this February, owners Max Moran and Geri Lawson heard many first- and second-hand misinformation that their business was dead. But like the ringing of a bell by a mistakenly buried but plenty lively individual, the couple has proof of life in the form of a banner proclaiming Indian Joe's return on the facade of its new building at Vista's Industrial Court business park. Two stories and coming in at 18,000 square feet, Moran's and Lawson's new spot is far larger than its predecessor. This will allow for the installation of a 15-barrel brewing system from Premier Stainless, another component that's much bigger than what came before. Back at Indian Joe's old spot on La Mirada Drive, Moran was brewing several times a day, seven days a week on a meager 20-gallon system. When opening the business he thought it would be sufficient, remembering a similar setup he saw at Mother Earth Brew Co., but soon discovered it wasn't sustainable. The problem was, the La Mirada facility wasn't big enough to house a system and cellar of significant size. In spite of that, they were determined to stay in their building until they found a new home, but a series of contentious dealings with their landlord led to them having to vacate quickly and unexpectedly, leading to the rumors that Indian Joe had gone out of business despite having a strong following of loyalists and interest from outside investors wanting to take the brand to the next level.
